

After three years at the French University Paris La Sorbonne, studying Management, I decided to apply for an one-year exchange in Poland. I realised that being abroad makes you discovering so much more, about people, culture and yourself. After this great experience, I have decided to take one gap year for internships and my aim was to find an internship in Asia.

In 2009, I went in Thailand for a two months backpacked road trip, and I really enjoyed this country. I have been lucky to find such an opportunity through an internship at Frontware International in Bangkok. First, it has realised my first goal which was to find a professional experience in Asia, and secondly, the opportunity to come back in this amazing country.

Most of people can see Thailand, as a place to spend wonderful holidays, but it is much more than this. When you arrived in this company, you are dropped into the real life. The team at Frontware welcomed me with kindness and curiosity, they taught me a lot about their culture. It was a really special experience, to meet a local team in a non-touristic district of Bangkok.

On a professional point of view, as ERP systems become essential nowadays, it was fruitful to learn more about this product. I have been working on the implementation of the OpenERP in Thailand. As an European software, it was really interesting to evaluate and compare the capacity of Thai people to be interested by this Belgium system.
